“There is a principle in criminal law that an accused cannot face double jeopardy but the families tell us that they face double and sometimes triple jeopardy when they are faced with serial applications for faint hope when the families must go back and relive the horror of the loved one who was taken from them.”

“We cannot bring back those who have been so callously murdered nor repair the hearts of those who have lost loved ones to murder. But we can ensure that those who commit the most serious crime of all, taking a life, will pay a more appropriate price. Once this bill becomes law, multiple murderers will no longer get volume discounts. The value of each life taken will be acknowledged, and Canadians will be better protected from the criminals who commit such heinous acts.”

Honourable Rob Nicholson, P.C., M.P.
